Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Saturday 27 Mar 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Fine interlude today for many, wet in northwest later.

Today:
Any early showers, perhaps wintry, fading quickly, with many areas dry and bright, although more cloud for many by afternoon. A chilly start but temperatures near normal by afternoon. Cloud and strengthening winds in the northwest heralding a wet evening.

Tonight:
Heavy rain in the northwest, this sinking into central parts, with clear spells and showers across Scotland later. Some southern and eastern parts of England staying mostly dry. Milder, windy.

Sunday:
Rain across central areas moving north, persistent and heavy over northwest England and western Scotland. Further south mostly dry, some bright or sunny spells in the southeast. Mild but windy.

Outlook for Monday to Wednesday:
Rain continuing across the far northwest, gradually easing by Wednesday. Elsewhere dry with sunny spells. Strong winds at first will ease and becoming warm in the south.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.